7 Tips for Saving Money on Back-To-School

- Take a good look at what you already got. Sure, it is tradition to buy new pencils, paper and notebooks at the start of the school year, but take a look at last year's leftover supplies before you go shopping. Chances are, you may not need as much as you think.
- Make a list. Do you find yourself buying things you don't really need? Stay focused by making a list before you go shopping.
- -Buy online. You can often find better deals on back-to-school supplies online, especially if you have promotion codes or coupons.
- Hit up the dollar store. Sure, they have some cheap candy, but they are also a goldmine for school supplies: pens, pencils, notebooks, you name it. You're likely to find better deals there than in a discount megastore and without the massive crowds.
- Buy used books, or better yet, borrow. Schoolbooks can add hundreds of dollars to your back-to-school bill. Keep it cheap by buying gently used versions online, or borrowing books. If you know your child will only be using it for a few weeks, see if it is available at your local library.
- Try Craigslist or yard sales. You'll find plenty of nice, barely worn clothing in your child's size for cheap by scouring sites like Craigslist and your local yard sale listings. You could also organize a clothing swap with some of your neighbors—chances are, they'll have some great barely-worn stuff in your child's size.
- Take advantage of your state's tax-free holiday. Some states will remove sales tax for a few days during back-to-school shopping season, so you can save quite a bit on your in-store purchases during that time. Florida's 2010 tax free days are August 13-15.
